Flight in Divided Germany

The Refugee Center Museum provides information about flight and emigration from the German Democratic Republic (GDR). The museum is located at the historical site in the former main building of the refugee center that opened in 1953.

Between 1949 and 1990 around four million people left the GDR for West Germany. Some 1.35 million people passed through the reception center on the west side of Berlin where they received food and housing. The Western Allies from the United States, Great Britain and France questioned them about the situation in the GDR and their reasons for fleeing or emigrating. To receive a residence permit for West Germany and West Berlin, new arrivals had to go through an elaborate process. The reception center served as a link between their old life in the GDR and the new life they aspired to in West Germany.

Development of the Grounds since the Fall of the Wall

The reception procedure for refugees and emigrants from the GDR was discontinued on July 1, 1990. Marienfelde, however, continued to operate as a reception center for repatriates from Eastern Europe and the (former) Soviet Union. Since 1964 the site had been a point of contact for them on their way to the West. As their numbers diminished, the grounds acquired a new purpose: Since 2010 the building has served as temporary housing for people fleeing crisis and war zones in and outside of Europe. In its special exhibitions, educational programs and public events, the Refugee Center Museum addresses stories of migration that extend beyond the German-German context. The Exhibition

Located at the historic site, the permanent exhibition documents the causes, process and consequences of German-German flight. It spans the period beginning with the decision to leave the GDR to the arrival in West German society. More than 900 objects are on display, including many original documents, photographs, and personal possessions of refugees and emigrants. Media stations provide an in-depth look at their biographies as they relate to larger political developments. A replica of refugee housing with original furniture from the 1950s gives an impression of the living conditions in the reception center.
